Founded by Zhang Hing and Sau-lin, the Cantonese sweet shop 'Cheung Hing Kee' in Kowloon, gained fame for its red bean soup. Daughter Sing-yip became a flight attendant, while son Kai-cheung pursued university. Chaos ensued when their mother suffered a stroke, leaving her vegetative.

Sing-yip quit her job to help her overworked father, Zhang Hing, but tensions rose without their mother. Redevelopment plans for Kowloon City threatened the shop's closure.

Sing-yip's Canadian boyfriend proposed they move to Canada. Amidst these changes, the fate of 'Cheung Hing Kee' and Sing-yip hangs in the balance, highlighting the challenge of preserving family ties amidst shifting circumstances.

In the murky half-light, race pigeon 043 has finally returned after seven years.

043 wasn't the only one that went missing seven years ago; the other was their son, Shih, whose disappearance remains the irreparable wound in Pigeon Master Ching's heart. The family's barely-maintained peace is shattered by 043's return, as Ching's daughter, Lulu, brings a beaten-up boy named Tig back home.

At first reluctant, Ching begins to see shades of Shih in Tig. After all, breeding pigeons with his son was his biggest wish. But wild pigeons can't change their ways. Lulu leaves abruptly and never comes back. Ching's wife, Ming, is also tempted to leave. She stealthily begins legal proceedings to declare Shih deceased.

In the aftershock of the storm, what course should the wounded follow?
